I AM MUSING TO-NIGHT.

By Charles Mc Lean Mc Ilvain.

I'm musing in the mellow light,

That fills my quiet room,-

Musing sadly alone to-night, While all without is gloom.

I am musing,-I am musing,-

Sadly musing all alone,-

With music in its tone.

I am musing of haleyon days,

Listening to the moaning wlud,

When life was free from care,

And its golden ways were strewed

Weeping sad,—weeping sore,— Mourning o'er the hallowed past,

I am musing of the cottage,-

My loved and early home,-

I left with spirit light and free.

I am musing,—I am musing,— Weeping,—beside its door,— Tears of mingled mirth and sorrow,

Where loved one rest in sweet repose,

O'er Joys and scenes of yore.

I am musing of the grave-yard,

Near home and winding rill.

Weeping,-in anguish deep,-

Shedding tears of lasting sorrow.

Where they in silence sleep.

Array'd in beauty bright,-

Twin sister of the angels fair,-

I am musing,-I am musing,-

Thinking if it can really be,

I am musing of the fountain,

In Templais' ball to-night,

I am musing,-Lam musing,-

Thinking of sisters dear,

To drink no wine or beer.

I am musing of darker days,

When in the tented field,

Where we washed our sins away,

With sparkling water bright.

With whom we pledged our honor,

The boys in blue met boys in grey,

In which the patriots' blood saved,

The how and arrows true, The links, the sceptre, and the spear,

Leading in Friendship, Love and Truth,

And tried their trusty steel.

1 am musing,-I am musing,-

Viewing the fitful strife,

Alone, the nation's li-e.

I am musing of the quiver,

So old and yet so new.

I am musing,-I am musing,--

Solving the "mystic tie,"-

That which shall rever die.

I'm musing of the better land,

Beyond the mystic shore,

I am musing,-I am musing,-

Thinking of angels there, In that bright and beavenly land,

In grandeur ever more.

So beautiful and fair.

I am musing of the Savior,

Who died without a frown,

May wear the golden crown.

I am musing,-I am musing,-

Hoping, on the last day,

To ascend in peace to heaven.
